But to return to the species of corporeal substances. If I should ask any one, whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative: and it cannot be denied, but he that says they are two distinct species, is in the right. But if an Englishman, bred in Jamaica, who perhaps had never seen nor heard of ice, coming into England in the winter, find the water he put in his bason at night, in Vol. II R a great part frozen in the morning, and not knowing any peculiar name it had, should call it hardened watery I ask, whether this would be a new species to him different from water And, I think, it would be answered here, it would not be to him a new species, no more than congealed gelly, when it is cold, is a distinct species from the same gelly fluid and warm; or than liquid gold, in the furnace, is a distinct species from hard gold in the hands of a workman. And if this be so, it is plain, that our distinct species are nothing but distinct complex ideas, with distinct names annexed to them. It is true, every substance that exists has its peculiar constitution, whereon depend those feasible qualities and powers we observe in it; but the ranking of things into species, which is nothing...
