Echo Library. Paperback. Condition: New. 104 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.2in.Excerpt: . . . sitting quietly in the stern. The Chief was again at the wheel. I found some canvas, part of a sail-cover, and stretched myself out on a seat, with the canvas over me to keep off the dampness. In a minute or two I was asleep, -the best and most refreshing sleep I ever remember. All through the rest of the night I was dimly aware of the sound of the water about the bows, and the cool breeze on my face. When I woke it was broad daylight. The boat had come to a stop, the mainsail was down, and they were taking in the jib. I heard the anchor go over with a splash, and then Pete came running aft. Hullo! Awake How are you All right. Where are we I dont know. Unknown island. I sat up and looked over the starboard side of the boat. We were in a little bay, and there was land about a hundred yards distant, -a rocky island with pine trees, and two or three small cottages set amongst the trees. I heard someone talking on the other side of the boat, and I looked up forward to see Sprague, in a bathing suit, and Gregory the Gauger. Sprague was entertaining the Gauger with a poem which he had been reciting at intervals ever since we met him. Shed git her little banjo an shed sing Kulla-lo-lo!-but not in Baileys Harbor, - hey, what She wouldnt get her little banjo there, or youd run her in, wouldnt you, Squire You and the Constable! Where did you get that poem asked Pete, who was furling the sail. I read it in a paper last week. Isnt it great...
