A PREVIOUS book of my assembled essays On Books and Arts touched on Pictorial Art, the Stage, and Literature. This one ventures to be altogether about Pictorial Art, with this reservation always: that to my mind no writing about any Art is other than pedantic, academic, or fragmentary mmoires pour servir, at the most it is not based on vivid, irrepressible interest in the Life we know. The general reader, here in England to whom this candid word is with much esteem addressed does not care greatly for the writing that he calls Art Criticism; and often I agree with him. But his ideas of what Art Criticism is, are apt to be narrow. To two fields he limits it. With him, Art Criticism all Criticism, indeed is primarily fault-finding. Secondly, it may be also, peradventure, investigation. But the investigation that is held to be creditable to have conferred distinction is generally investigation into minor facts: little, disputed points that have the interest of uncertainty and puzzle. The German, perhaps, is responsible for introducing, or for making much of,...
