Excerpt: . . . the Cape of Good Hope, and Coromandel. The torpedoes or cramp rays, which form the second sub-genus, have the head flattened in the form of a quoit, the mouth large, short and fleshy. These forms ally them on one side to the rhinobatos, and on the other to the rays properly socalled. The torpedo rays are celebrated for the faculty which they possess of giving violent shocks to those who touch them. The organ which performs the part of an electrifying machine is an apparatus of tubes divided by diaphragms into little hexagonal cells situated near the head, before the pectoral fins. The torpedoes give shocks to the animals which disturb them; and it appears that in this manner they benumb those which they intend to make their prey; they have no other weapons. Torpedoes are to be found in almost all the seas. The...
