Excerpt from Anthropometry as an Aid to Mental Diagnosis: A Simple Method for the Examination of Sub-Normals As early as 1892, Porter concluded from a study of children that there is a physical basis of mental precocity, that dull children are lighter than the average child and precocious children heavier, that, me diocrity of mind is correlated with mediocrity of physique. Christopher (6) later reinvestigated Porter s conclusion and confirmed it. Smedley in 1899, further demonstrated that the evolutionary ideal child stood somewhere above the average in each measurement, and that the more advanced pupils stood higher in the physical measurements than the backward ones. In 1900, Smedley (21) confirmed his own results of the previous year and from data divested of the in uence of age and sex showed the existence of a direct correlation between physical condition and mental capacity, concluding that children physically superior were superior in school efficiency, and that this held true for all of his measure ments. Gratsianofi (13) and Sack in Russia, and macdonald Beyer and debusk America, also found successful children larger than unsuccessful. Galton (9) on the other hand, with adults, found no connection between success in literary examinations (at Cambridge) and stature, weight, strength, or breathing capacity. West too, found an inverse relation between brightness and size, while Gilbert (10, 11) found no relationship.
