

Future Babble: Why Pundits Are Hedgehogs and Foxes Know Best (Paperback)

By Professor of History Daniel Gardner

Plume Books, 2012. Paperback. Condition: New. Reprint. Language: English . Brand New Book. New York Times bestselling author of Superforecasting and Future Babble. Genuinely arresting . . . required reading for journalists, politicians, academics, and anyone who listens to them. Steven Pinker, author of How the Mind Works We are awash in predictions. In newspapers, blogs, and books; on radio and television. Every day experts tell us how the economy will perform next year, if housing sales will grow or shrink, and who will win the next election. Predictions are offered about the climate, food, technology, and the world our grandchildren will inhabit. And we can't get enough of it. Drawing on research in cognitive psychology, political science, and behavioral economics, award-winning journalist Dan Gardner explores our obsession with the future. He shows how famous pundits, hedgehogs who stick to one big idea no matter how circumstances change, become expert at explaining away predictions that are wrong while foxes, who are more equivocal in their judgments, are simply more accurate.
