Excerpt: .fortune see this you arouse him to do likewise, and earning a fortune becomes a real possible thing, not a gift of fate. Or if the fortune has not been accumulated by the legitimate process of business, but by wild and reckless speculation, the curse of our Nation, show him the inevitable process; that as the bank account unjustly swells, so surely does the conscience and honor of the man shrink, until at last money has taken the place of manhood, and the younger man s desire for the ill-gotten gains changes into commiseration of the poor deluded soul which has robbed itself far more than it has robbed the world. Or again, the young student, who discovers what books the philosopher has read or would recommend for reading, feels that he has obtained possession of a ladder by which he too may climb to the dizzy height of scholarship attained; it becomes a stimulus to his flagging energies. It is this realization of inevitable process in all success that does away with that fatal paralysis of effort, a belief in good or bad luck, with which many a young man satisfies his conscience or smothers his aspirations. Let him from childhood be led to realize that there is no luck about it, but that each man makes or mars his own fortune, and if there remains a spark of the ideal in him it kindles into flame. Many of the questionings of the...
