Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints Millennial Star, Vol. 72: May 26, 1910 James, and particularly notice the reason which he gives why faith without works is dead. He says that it stands, or tries to stand, alone or by itself. Now, ask yourself how many principles there are in the universe of God which do or can stand alone? If they are living, active ones, or not dead. God exists as Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Man can have being only as male and female, and throughout the realm of organic nature science has demonstrated that the same fact relating to sex obtains. In their individual existence the male and female of mankind have a being on this earth only as body and spirit, and when they are separated death ensues. If there was no good, evil could not be found. Who can conceive of a world suspended in space upon it self Is gravitation an independent principle? Can belief exist without knowledge? Faith is belief and hope united, and so the statement of St. James that faith can not exist without works appears to be as deeply intrenched in nature as her constitution it self; and it follows that the theology of those who hold that a man may be saved by belief alone, or by faith alone, or by works alone, rests on a sandy foundation. Which principle of the gospel is independent of all the others? Which virtue of the saint stands alone? Faith and works united is Mormon doctrine now, and has been from the day this Church was founded. It is a logical, a scriptural doctrine.
