Mark out principal points with dividers and scale, if possible sketch in balance of design with scratch-awl or use tracing paper. With small onglette graver lightly line in details of design and then model or cut away as much as possible with chisels. True and smooth the modeling with engraving tools and when satisfied no more can be done with these tools use riffs, Fig. 151, to finish. Perhaps the use of hardened steel punches made into several shapes that will fit into details of modeling may be used to advantage in truing hollow lines or cuts, or for matting surfaces. The use of these tools is governed by details of design and should be used with care so as not to displace the steel. Use pencil oil-stone to remove all scratches or ruffle marks from bright surfaces and sides, or any steep angles in the modeling. A very high polish is obtained by polishing with flour of emery applied with oil upon wooden sticks or leather. Hubs for designs having piercings: Prepare hub and lay out the same as directed above. When setting down drill out places for piercings to same depths as the outside margin. Use drills that are 1-64 of an inch smaller all around than outline of piercing. With scratch-awl and hammer make punch mark in center of piercing to insure the drills starting in correct place. Make and fit gauge for outline of design...
