Excerpt: . young man of sound sense, strong political convictions, patient observation, inherent tact and skill, and most charming as well as brilliant manners. In 1837 he took his seat in the Senate of the United States--the youngest member of that body. Calhoun, Webster, Clay, Benton, Silas Wright, Woodbury, Buchanan, Walker, and Linn were members. It was the commencement of the presidency of Mr. Van Buren. In this highest field of political labor he pursued substantially the same course as in the Lower House. The youngest member, he did not attempt distinction by open controversy or competition with these great figures to whom alone the country looked, and upon whose wisdom its hopes were hung. He made himself, however, a diligent member of the various committees to which he was appointed, and soon obtained an enviable reputation for a thorough mastery of every subject assigned...
