An apparatus used for affixing the addresses on a large number of missives, such as newspapers, upon which the same series of names must be inscribed as the day of issue recurs. There are two general forms of this machine. In one the addresses are separately printed on slips of gummed paper, which are fed from the apparatus, which cuts off each address in turn, and allows the latter to remain attached to the wrapper. The other mode is to set up the type of each address in a form, and so to arrange the forms that they are successively presented at a spot to which the enveloped papers are consecutively fed. A large number of these machines have been patented. Adhesion is the molecular attraction exerted between bodies in contact. It occurs between solids and solids, liquids and solids, liquids and liquids, gases and solids, gases and gases, and gases and liquids. The adhesion between two plates of the same material is the same as that between one of the plates and any material which possesses a less adhesive property. Adhesion is supposed to manifest itself at an appreciable distance before actual contact of bodies. The ascent of liquids in capillary tubes is a result of adhesion, as well as the spreading out of liquids between two sur faces kept in close proximity. The chain-pump, in which the water is carried up by a simple chain in a tube, is a practical example of adhesion of liquids to solids. The adhesion of gases and solids is illustrated by the adhesion...
