Such books are the most hopeful of any we have in teaching the calculus to younger pupils. These two books were reviewed by Mr. M. A. Norgaard. A study of these works would seem to show that a course in the elementary calculus in the senior high school should have its theory based upon algebraic polynomials with the explanations given by means of graphical representations. The work should be closely allied to physics and mechanics by the use of a sufficient number of suitable problems from these fields to give reality to the subject and an insight into the wide use of the calculus in applied fields. 4 4 This is the method that is followed in the course of which a synopsis is given...
