A witness has before him the fear of infamy attaching to one detected in a lie, the fear of committing sin and the knowledge that there was such a thing as prosecution for perjury. He thought there should be more prosecutions for deliberate perjury. He mentioned the causes why people were sometimes unable to speak the truth, though willing: --(1.) Lack of opportunity to observe the matters as to which they were asked to give evidence. (2.) A defective vision. (3.) Want of judgment to discriminate facts from inferences. (4.) Bad memory. (5.) Want of power to express clearly and accurately what was clear to the faculty of observation. true, the defendant's solicitor could go in the box and deny it. The Court of Appeal said this was a shocking suggestion and a monstrous charge, the result being that the...
