It most ardently argues for the relevance of intentional subjects in social and cultural process and similarly the impact of history or event upon the wider social structure (Ortner, 1984:137f). Focusing in the following on the work of Bourdieu (1977), Sahlins (1987, 1994, 2000) and later Ortner (1984, 1989, 2006a, 2006b), I argue that practice does mainly aim at solving one major theoretical problem: how do actors and structure interact in order to 'make' the world How can (intentional) individuals be reconciled with the influence of an overarching system of presumptions Or as Sahlins puts it (2000:295): 'how shall we reconcile structure that are logical and durable with events that are emotional and ephemeral'. The common ground most authors build shall also serve as...
