By the time I were five year old I was the only water boy in our house. In fact, I aint sure but what I didnt start totin water before I could walk. Perhaps just a draggin that bucket along behind me as I crawled along. Now I know all of this dont seem important to most folks, and that is sure not something that I am braggin on. It was a damnation to my soul, and a curse on my independence. It put a hump in my shoulders, a crook in my spine and taxed my brain something terrible. But it helped to make me what I am today, and I reckon it could just as easily have made me what I aint. The Waterboy bits and pieces of Yesterday is the sharing of the authors life as told to his daughter in thoughts and memories tucked quietly away in fleeting bits and pieces of my mind. Ever so gently they are drifting away into the stillness of the night, farther away from where they can be reached. The time has come, so now I will put it down on this here paper for you to read in the quiet times. Everybody should know from whence they come. It is the story of growing up in the southeast Oklahoma hill country in the 1940s where life was hard and those living it here were poor, but there was always a pan of Mamas biscuits warming on the back of the wood stove and plenty of love to go around. Mamas love was indestructible and unimpeachable. It could in no ways be duplicated and would forever be extolled and could...
