As was mentioned in the introduction, alfalfa has the power of supplying nitrogen to the soil, and it is a good thing Provid ence provided this plant with this power, for if it did not have it there would be but few soils sufficiently rich in nitrogen to grow the crop for any length of time. This same thing would prob ably hold true to a somewhat lesser extent with the other legum inous crops. For they all contain a large amount of nitrogen or protein. They therefore must be able to secure a large amount of it from the soil. The manner in which alfalfa and the other legumes supply nitrogen to the soil is through the bacteria which live in and upon their roots. These bacteria are not originally present in all soils, for these particular bacteria cannot live with out legumes, nor can the legumes live for any length of time without the bacteria, the principal reason being that the legume is such a greedy feeder upon the nitrogen in the soil that unless the bacteria are present, it soon exhausts the available nitrogen in almost any soil. While all legumes harbour bacteria of much the same nature, it has been found that there are certain kinds that prefer each particular leguminous plant. This is probably due to the fact that these particular bacteria have adapted them selves to this plant. These bacteria are so small that they can scarcely be seen with even a microscope oi the highest power. It is believed that they are absorbed by the minute root hairs along with the water, and after being absorbed irritate the rootsto such an extent that...
