Excerpt from The Backslider When Robert bought the spot, it was rocky and barren, and seemed to be out of the way of every thing. There was an old house upon it, that had the reputation of being haunted, because it looked so desolate, and had neither windows nor door. Some of Robert's friends advised him to have nothing to do with it, - for, they said, the last owner could not make any thing grow there, and actually starved to death after trying nine or ten years; and since his death he continued to return occasionally and throw stones at the windows, which afforded evident proof that they had not missed their aim. Robert, however, did not believe in haunted houses. He said, that if departed spirits went to heaven, they were too happy to want to come back again; and that if the evil one got hold of the wicked, he would take pretty good care that they should not escape him; and as for a man's having died in the house, he should like to have them tell him, where there was a house that men did not die in. Having thus justified his intention, he went to work to make the house habitable; and in a short time he and his wife, Susan, were comfortably fixed in it. He then began clearing the land from stones, and as fast as he collected a pile, he went to work to make his wall. Susan contributed her part to their prosperity. She could weed the garden and keep it in order, while he was employed in heavier work; and in winter, besides he;...
