Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Spinners Book of Fiction And in some inscrutable way Sister Dominica during that long conversation, while Mrs. Grace and her other daughters dispensed egg-hog in the parlor it was New Year s Day - had made the young girl a part of her very self, until Teresa indulged the fancy that without and within she was a replica of that Concha Arguello of California s Springtime; won her heart SO completely that She would have followed her not only into the comfortable and in comparably situated convent of the saint of Siena, but barefooted into that wilderness of Soledad where the Indians still prayed for their lost Beata. It was just eight morths tonight since She had taken her first vows, and She had been honestly aware that there was no very clear line Of demarcation in her fervent young mind between her love of Sister Dominica and her love of God. Tonight, almost prostrate before the co in of the dead nun, she knew that so far at least all the real passion of her youth had owed in an unde eted tide about the feet of that remote and exquisite being whose personal charm alone had made a convent possible in the chaos that followed the discovery of gold. All the novices, many Of the Older nuns, the pupils invar iably, worshipped Sister Dominica; whose saintli ness without austerity never chilled them, but whose tragic story and the impression She made of already dwelling in a heaven of her Own, notwithstandingher sweet and consistent humanity, placed her on a pinnacle where any display Of affection would have been unseemly. Only once, after...
