Excerpt from A College Drama: In Three Acts, Entitled an Episode in College Life Scene I. - Glass room. Sound of hell. Scuffling of feet. Rush of Freshmen into the room. Some take seats, others stand. Uproar and noise. Song. Smith. - The next will be a beautiful and lone Duet by Peter Wunderbank. West. - Give place To Germany! All. - A song from Germany! Peter. - All right! I sing you such duets my boys, Dat all the people say to me, let him Duet again! Let him duet again! (Song by Peter, followed by confusion.) Enter Prex. Prex. - Young gentlemen, gymnasium s over there! (To Scott.) Take off your hat! (Exeunt.) Words. - Now furl our sail and down our helms, After the gale let fall the calms. (They sit down.) Scott. - What an imposing man he is! Quaked, quelched, And quieted by but a look! Tis clear That Prexy s lord of wind and wave, and when He speaks, then this diminutive, and this Tumultuous sea of ours is quieted. Smith. - It well befits his station. We would laugh At less a man. But let imposing men Beware of imposition! They remain Imposing longer. West. - Nay I saw him smile And look good natured as he went from here. Smith. - Oh, he s all right! A frown and smile is far The better than a smile and darker frown. Say, none of us are hurt, are we? By Jove! We ve nearly got a run! Several. - Who kept the time? Smith. - A minute more!
