What if you could go back in time and stop one of history's worst atrocities from happening? What if you didn't have to go back in time to do it? What if that opportunity came straight to you? Chris and Karen Ransom first meet at an anti-Iraq War rally in college. She's a committed pacifist with a deeply personal attachment to her viewpoint; he's just a dude trying to pick up chicks. Still together and married nine years later, they unexpectedly receive news that's about to change their lives - a development Karen had actively hoped against, and something Chris secretly thought was impossible. Our heroes wake up in the presence of two unexpected visitors, and learn of the choice they have to make. War is coming. Worse than Iraq. Worse than any war that's ever been fought. It's a war that threatens our existence as a species - indeed, that threatens existence itself. Chris and Karen may possess the ability to stop it. But when the values that have ruled their lives for years come in conflict with who they truly are as people, Chris and Karen are about to learn that the decision to Stop The War is really not so simple.
