Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: :the following LOCAL NOTES ON VANISHING WILD FLOWERS, The State of Connecticut has a law designed to protect its native flora. In the city of Boston there is a Society for the Protection of Native Plants, and lately the New York Botanical Garden has been presented with a fund, the interest of which is to be used for the same admirable purpose. The preservation of living plants in their native haunts has naturally received much attention in botanical journals, and the daily press has also done its part in serving notice upon the public, that they who ruthlessly pluck, dig up or burn the wild plants, are doing the common February 8th, 1902. it is an injury. Of course in every locality the conditions are somewhat different. The plants that are in danger of extermination in one place may be abundant in another. For this reason Mrs. N. L. Britton, whose article on Vanishing Wild Flowers, published in Torreyia in August last, has suggested that some notes of a local character could be given for Staten Island The chief destroyers of our local flora seem to be: 1. Fire 2. Agriculture, building operations, and the wood chopper. 3. Cattle 4. Indiscriminate picking of flowers. The crowds of passengers on the Staten Island boats on Sundays and holidays in warm weather, bear away such enormous quantities, that the wonder grows that there are any flowers left alive except daisies and golden rods, whose floral display can hardly be reduced by...
