General Accounting Office, 2003 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)54442666 Subject: Ethnology -- United States. Excerpt: . . . Appendix I: How Ethnographic Studies Can Inform Agencies Actions helpful in interpreting sites that have a divisive past, such as massacre sites, where American Indians lost their lives, and plantation parks, which are characterized by strong, often divergent views of slavery among descendants of enslaved people and their owners. EPA, recognizing the importance of human and social needs and local community actions in ecosystem protection, has drawn on ethnography to support such community actions. Staff in EPA's Office of Wetlands, Oceans, and Watersheds created a guide that incorporates ethnographic approaches in outlining procedures for identifying community cultural 5 values, beliefs, and behaviors related to the environment. The guide is intended for training people, organizations, and institutions in watershed protection and public health professionals as well as federal, tribal, state, and local agencies seeking technical skills for improving stakeholder involvement. EPA has also made ethnographic consultants available. In 1996, EPA's Office of Ground Water and Drinking Water set up a 5-year cooperative agreement with the Society for Applied Anthropology to assist community-based efforts to protect local drinking water supplies and to understand the cultural and social motivations and obstacles to community involvement at the local level. For example, an anthropologist helped the Lower Elwha Klallam Tribe explore how its traditional cultural emphasis on loose local control of natural resources may affect its ability to adopt source water protection programs and helped tribal members see the need for protective management in light of the reservations growing population. ONDCP uses ethnographic expertise to alert policy makers to short-term changes and newly emerging problems concerning specific...
