Its disciplinary value in the cultivation of observation and deftness of touch that the eye and hand may work easily together is alone worth all the time and money spent upon it, while its broadening effect upon life in opening new paths of expression and enjoyment reaches too far into the future to be measured. Four years ago under a new state law an endeavor was made to put this subject on a firmer basis in the Elmira schools, and against some opposition and more indifference a beginning was made. Interest in a new field had to be aroused and held, and with many teachers having no technical training, rooms crowded to overflowing and...
