The English nation has entered upon a struggle of paramount importance and of peculiar interest. After nearly forty years of repose it has engaged in a war which involves the peace of Europe. But the question is of still larger import; for if the interest of Europe is hound up in it, the destinies and future condition of Asia actually depend upon it. The power of Russia, growing with a startling rapidity, and ever exercised in the support of conquest and despotism, has excited the greatest apprehensions in the cabinets of Europe. Russia is essentially a military power, and aggression on the territory of its neighbours is almost coeval with its history as a nation: the designs of its rulers upon the possessions of the Ottoman, have descended from one sovereign to another as a sort of political heirloom. The conquest of Turkey, by fraud or force, or by a combination of both, was a matter never to be lost sight of, until opportunity should serve for its accomplishment. Barbaric Russia, with its enormous territorial possessions both in Europe and in Asia, and its rapidly-increasing population, is already a dangerous neighbour. Divided Poland fell before it. Its ambitious emperor is intoxicated by the possession of unlimited power in his own dominions, and entertains the Napoleonic dream of universal empire. What would Russia be, if her arrogant despot succeeded in acquiring another territory, almost as large, and infinitely more fertile and...
