THE OPHTHALMIC REVIEW, VOL. 12: A MONTHLY RECORD OF OPHTHALMIC SCIENCE; JUNE, 1893 (CLASSIC REPRINT) (HARDBACK)

Forgotten Books, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Ophthalmic Review, Vol. 12: A Monthly Record of Ophthalmic Science; June, 1893 Views concerning the essential importance of pressure and retention of fluid. His philosophic caution is to be admired. Not so the repetition of objections which have long been answered. For instance, he doubts the importance of a closed filtration angle because it has been found in eyes which are not glaucomatous. The facts of the case need hardly be repeated, but we would suggest to Dr. Berry the following simile. Let the steam pipe of a boiler be closed while the boiler is in full work the steam pressure will rise. But one does not expect a rise of pressure if steam is not being generated, or if it is escaping freely elsewhere. It need not be said that the subjects of refraction and accommodation are dealt with in a thorough and masterly manner. The student of ophthalmology who has the necessary knowledge of mathematics may here dive into some of the profundities of physiological optics, and those who cannot follow the author through all his formulae may safely pass the small print by and trust to the large for all essential facts. In the chapter on affections of the muscles we find figured and described the excellent tests for latent deviations lately devised by Maddox.
