Excerpt: . these negative results the practical temper either of these thinkers or of the English people is adequately reflected. There is a deep religious earnestness native to the English mind which ever holds practically to the great verities, even where theory fails. The very cutting loose from traditions, eminently characteristic of the thinkers we have been considering, is, in a deep sense, faith in the individual and in his validity! English institutions eloquently point in the same direction. It is the same with English poetry, where George S. Morris says we find the best English philosophy, from Spenser, influenced by the Platonic revival, and Shakespeare, the poet of the moral order, to Tennyson, with his message of self-reverence, self-knowledge, selfcontrol. It is Philonous who says to Hylas, as his parting words, You see, Hylas, the water of yonder fountain, how it is forced upwards,...
