They must not contain more than 33 lbs. of ammonia per cubic foot. The bottles will then stand heating up to 65 C. without fear of explosion, the pressure even at 65 C. being only two-thirds of the pressure to which the bottles have been tested. ANALYTICAL PAST Liquid ammonia varies in its composition, and may contain from 97 to over 99 per cent.  $\text{NH}_3$ ; from traces to nearly per cent. carbonate up to 10 per cent. lubricating oil, from T-0 to T5 per cent. of water, and from q to 16G per cent. of other liquid impurities, besides under 17ff per cent. of mineral matter, sand, oxide of iron, etc. The impurities may consist of pyridines, acetonitrile, ethyl-alcohol, benzene, and naphthaline. The valuation consists chiefly in the determination of the total residue which is left on evaporation. The sample is taken by connecting a pipette with taps both in the narrow tubes above and below the bulb to the steel bottle, when the liquid by its own pressure is forced into it. The quantity of  $\text{NH}_3$  in the pipette is determined by weighing; the ammonia is then allowed to evaporate, and the weight of the remaining substance, after passing through a current of air at 70 to 80 C. , gives the amount of impurities. This method obviously gives results for the impurities which are too low. Graduated pipettes have therefore been constructed in which the...
