I had originally intended to hunt crocodile for a few days more, but, knowing the water in the Everglades would be getting lower as the month advanced, I considered it prudent to push south, locating well where the largest crocodile lived, intending to return in March for a systematic hunt after my winter s work in the Everglades had been accomplished. On the 31st of December we got the Cupid under way and ran as far as the mouth of Jew-Fish Creek. This creek is nothing but a very narrow passage, which connects Barnes Sound with Black Water Sound. I am using here the...
