It is true that now and then some transcendent genius is at the same time a great physician and eminent scientist in other departments; but this is indeed a rare exception. The late Sir James Simpson was at the same time the foremost physician of his day and the greatest archaeologist in Scotland. Such an example should not tempt you to pass the bounds set to your powers, for Simpson, always working at the highest pressure, devoted to other pursuits the time which should have been given to needful rest, and paid the penalty in an early death in the midst of his usefulness. It is necessary that the physician should possess mental industry, habits of study, thorough knowledge of his own tongue, and...
