There are good reasons she left Spinning Hills behind years ago-and once she s back, her subconscious mind decides to replay them, leading a sleepwalking Hannah back to the scene of her young heartbreak. And as luck would have it, the man living in that house is currently her fiercest opponent . . . and a distractingly good-looking one. Matt Williams has one job-to keep industry in Ohio. When he learns that one of the region s most important employers has secret plans to close their local headquarters, he takes action . . . and finds himself up against the woman who keeps showing up at his house in the middle of the night. In those moments, when Hope is grieving and vulnerable, Matt would give anything to ease her pain. But romance isn t realistic for two people with completely different goals-unless working together gives them both the chance to vanquish ghosts, heal old wounds, and start living for love . . .
