Brand New Book. Excerpt from Ralph Fabian s Mistakes In the suburbs of one of the prettiest old towns in the South was Elmhurst, the home of Ralph Fabian. It was set back on a lawn that sloped gradually to the road and was built in a style almost universal in that part of the coun try forty years ago, with a broad piazza, which was supported by handsome columns, and which extended across the front of the house and on the south side. The rooms were spa cious and the ceilings high, the windows large and many-paned, giving a cheerful aspect to the home. Standing wide open most of the time, they seemed to be continually offering the generous hospitality for which the Fabian family had long been noted.
