Having hitherto spoken of his public actions, we shall now fay something of his person and character. He was low of stature, but well set, had a broad open chest, his eyes large and clear, of a fair complexion, with a fresh chearsul and ngaging countenance: as navigation had been been his whole study, he was a persect master in every branch of it, especially astronomy, and the application of it to the nautical art. His voyage round the world is an incontestable proof of his courage, capacity, patience, and public spirit; since he performed every thing that could be expected from a man, who preferred the honour and prosit of his country to his own private...
