MEMOIRS OF THE BERNICE PAUAHI BISHOP MUSEUM OF POLYNESIAN ETHNOLOGY AND NATURAL HISTORY, VOL. 1 (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from Memoirs of the Bernice Pauahi Bishop Museum of Polynesian Ethnology and Natural History, Vol. 1 IN selecting the Stone Implements of the Ancient Hawaiians for the subject of the next chapter of what I had some years since intended should be a history of Hawaii, or rather of the Hawaii before the advent of other and very different racial influences, it may be fair to explain to readers, almost at the Start, my method in this fragmentary edition of such information about Hawaii and its customs as I have been able to gather during the past thirty-six years. And I must be pardoned for thrusting a personality into what I greatly desire to make a clear impersonal statement of facts. When I came to these islands a young man full of enthusiasm, fresh from the teaching Agassiz, Gray, Wyman and Cooke, eager to study nature in all her aspects, unbiased by the only anxious to learn, I found a land where traces of a native civilization were not all effaced. American Mission had labored a little more than forty years and the results of their work were vigorous: the missionary homes still existed, oases in the outlying districts, where I could with venerable men and women who had landed in 1820 when the young son and successor Kamehameha had cast aside all that his ancestors had held sacred in religion, and was not yet ready to assume new responsibilities, -indeed he hardly gave much thought to the great change that impending. One era was at an end, another was on the threshold. Hitherto intercourse with strangers had but little modified the native ways of living. There had been...
