The prophylaxis of breast abscesses during pregnancy consists in absolute cleanliness of the nipple, and prompt treatment of mastitis by bandage, ice and saline catharsis. Value of the Von Pirquet Reaction in Children. Leo Cohn (Berl. klin. Woch., October 3, 1910) believes that the skin reaction is of most value in the tuberculosis of infants. A positive reaction in adults and older children has no practical value; a negative one is net against tuberculosis with any certainty in cachectic persons. Infection with tuberculosis is most frequent in the earliest months, especially in families that are tuberculous. A tuberculous infection in a nursing child has a bad prognosis. Of eighteen cases infected in the first year, sixteen died; only two failed to have a...
