Stenton Publishing, United States, 2007. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . This book deals with how much is retained in a person s upbringing from parents, friends and other relatives and how those influences are a part of a person s daily demeanor. Those influences aid in adaption, reaction, perception and dealing with the many obstacles in a person s life. Here is the root of the title, which suggests that these emotions are indeed past down in some form or another without the receiver s consent, and are not often realized by the recipient. The book uses this idea and demonstrates this influence as it plays a part in the lives of two young people who meet in the hope of beginning a long term relationship. The relationship is eventually strained because of an unexpected pregnancy and the story unfolds to include those external forces; friends, parents, siblings and friends. During this disclosure, it is revealed how extensive these influences are in each person s life and how far back in each generation is infected.
