Army War College, 1996 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)44375239 Subject: China -- Foreign relations -- 1976-. Excerpt: . . . is difficult to imagine the circumstances under which these or other ASEAN countries could combine, much less that they could be joined by Taiwan--with whom none of them has formal diplomatic relations--to resist a PRC bent on expansion. Japan presents a different picture. Its highly competent navy has modern ships equipped with state-of-the-art weaponry and staffed by well-educated officers and men. The Japanese navy has twice the underway replenishment capacity of China. However, article nine of the Japanese constitution forbids the use of force to solve international disputes and there is a well-organized, articulate anti-defense sector within the countrys population. However, just as with the ASEAN states, it is difficult to imagine the circumstances under which Japan would wish to challenge the PRC militarily. Until fairly recently, Asian-Pacific states tended to take a rather detached view of the Chinese threat, believing that disputes with the PRC would be settled in due course through peaceful negotiations. For example,...
