He was the river that rushed past the village taking with it any hopes they might have of rebuilding their lives. Lilyth thought she understood. Then Tristan took her to the edge of the village to see her first corpse. She fell to the ground and he caught her. He held her. He told her that he d protect her and that there was no need to worry. He was wrong. They were caught between a shadow rolling in through the east and the river swelling up to the west. This dead man had brought with him a frightening revelation.
