Excerpt from Our National Constitution as Related to National Growth: A Consideration of Certain Aspects of the War With Spain Centuries are arbitrary divisions in the stream Of time, but by a coincidence it Often happens that great national changes occur a century apart. As we take our stand in the closing days Of the nineteenth century and look backward, we Observe that a hundred years ago the forces were at work in England which brought about the extinction Of personal gov ernment and the enactment Of such epoch-making measures as the Reform Bill. If we look back another hundred years in the history Of the mother country, we may note the inter esting succession Of events which, following in the train Of the Revolution Of 1688, culminated in the accession Of George I. And the entrance Of England upon the stage of European politics. From the age Of the Plantagenets to the age Of the Revolution the country had stood apart from more than passing contact with the fortunes Of the Continent. Thence forth, however, England was destined to play an important...
