Excerpt: . . . nment smarter and more effective than by using the Internet and information technology (IT). The reach of the Internet and the speed with which that reach was achieved may be the big story of the last decade and, notwithstanding the falling fortunes of dot-com stocks, I think it may be the big story of the next decade and beyond. In order to get ahead in todays world, you pretty much have to be plugged in and powered up, connected and ready for business 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. The result is that just about every aspect of society in America is undergoing major transformation, and it is our obligation to see that government does not lag behind in that transformation. Information technology offers an unprecedented opportunity to redefine the relationship between the public and its government just as it has redefined the relationship between retailers and consumers, teachers and consumers, and in fact in a very different area, soldiers and their foes. The idea is to apply the lessons...
