Excerpt from A History of the Smithfield Gate of the Parish of St. Bartholomew the Great, E. C On the suppression of the monastery by the king in October, 1539, the nave was entirely destroyed and the stones carted away to some of the many buildings which the king then had on hand. The west front of the nave went with the rest, save this one side portal. The reason for its escape from the general destruction no doubt was that it made a convenient gateway to the church, and, by the destruction of the guest house of the monastery, to the priory close still known as Bartholomew Close. Every entrance through the monastic walls, which form the present bounds of the parish of St. Bartholomew the Great, was guarded by gates (and with few exceptions, those gates and their attendant watchmen still remain), so that this old arched doorway formed a convenient place in which to hang one set of the parochial gates. When, in 1544, Henry VIII. Sold the whole parish to Sir Richard Rich, there were two rooms, one over the other, above the archway - rooms no doubt in the tower, and from that time the history of the archway can be fairly well traced.
