Considering the war, the outlook is about as encouraging as it has ever been in the history of the station. New believers are coming in since the scene of war moved over to Manchuria in ever increasing numbers. The Tong Hak society, if not dead, is very subdued at present. Japanese garrisons in all the towns along the main road make the country more secure thn it ever was before, and have a wholesome influence in suppressing injustice among the native officials and enforcing sanitary regulations whenever necessary. We renew our arguments of last...
