Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Report of the Plant Pathologist to July 1, 1906 In the spring of 1904 pear blight appeared very extensively in the Sacramento Valley. Much alarm was felt by the growers, knowing the history and result of the disease in the San Joaquin, and the Experiment Station, the various County Boards, the State Commission of Horticulture, and the U. S. Department of Agriculture were called upon for advice and relief. This Division being new at the time, consisting of the writer alone, nothing could be done during the summer of 1904 except to determine the extent of the outbreak by much traveling about through the whole northern region, and to assist the growers as much as possible by advice as to the nature of the disease and the best known treatment, and by inspecting their orchards. The blight developed extensively that summer and invaded most of the important pear districts. In March, 1905, appropriations of the Legislature of that session made available to the Station about for the investigation of pear blight during the succeeding two years. Meantime, Professor M. B. Waite, the leading authority on pear blight, had been sent to California by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, to lend all possible assistance to the growers. Considerable activity was also being displayed by the State and various County Boards of Horticulture in a desire to do what was possible toward suppressing this disease.
