Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: .THE VALUE OF ORAL EXPRESSION I do not wish to depreciate in the least the value and importance of written language. I simply wish to call attention to the practical value of oral language and to the relation of this form of expression to the written form. It appears to me that too many teachers regard their language work as having to do exclusively with written language; they seem to think that writing is the only use there is for language. A few persons have such great thoughts, or such beautiful thoughts, that they need to write them down for the benefit of their fellow-men. Many persons use the written language for professional and business purposes, but the great majority of people have less need of written language than is generally supposed. This is not an age of letter-writing; in fact, letter-writing is almost a lost...
