NASHVILLE JOURNAL OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY, VOL. 109: DECEMBER, 1915 (CLASSIC REPRINT) (HARDBACK)

FBC LTD, 2018. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Nashville Journal of Medicine and Surgery, Vol. 109: December, 1915 There is one very important exception to the statement that adrenalin will empty the visceral vessels of their blood. As has been pointed out, adrenalin has a vasodilator and not a vasoconstrictor action on the cardiac arteries. It is also well known that this powerful agent has little or no effect upon the cerebral and pulmonary blood-vessels. Thus we see that the blood supply of the tripod of life is not diminished in physical stress; on the contrary, the heart actually has more blood to send to the muscles, borrowed from the viscera, which do not need it at the time, while the brain and lungs have an undiminished supply. This is an exceedingly significant and impressive biological fact. It has been found that when adrenalin is set free in the circulation the blood will clot more rapidly. This is, of course, another safeguard developed by nature in animals as a preservative in times of conflict and injury. After long study of this question Cannon concludes that the property of causing a more rapid clotting of the blood does not reside in the adrenalin itself, but in the liver, and that the action of the adrenalin is to force the liver to set free this blood-clotting agent in the bloodstream in greater abundance, in times of stress, than in ordinary conditions. This substance, whatever it may be, is continuously destroyed in the body and apparently as rapidly renewed in the liver. The above statement has not yet conclusively proved to be correct, but there seems little doubt that the facts are as stated. About the Publisher Forgotten Books...
