It was founded by a group of students from the University of Essex for the purpose of giving a public domain to their private writing. The space itself was freed from editorial standards and was shaped solely by the work posted to it. Over the next months the number of contributors and contributions kept growing and peaked at 20 individual voices in early 2015. During this time, the EWC also grew beyond its presence in the virtual world. For the 2014-15 season of study, weekly readings were organised around campus, where writers would stand-up and read aloud their work, and infrequent writing sessions took place with varying amounts of caffeine and alcohol. Since then, and mostly due to the graduation and departure of the original members from the University, the blog has largely become an archive for its early years, though still plays host to new writing more or less every month. We are publishing the present anthology as a celebration of the blog, its...

Excellent electronic book and helpful one. Better than never, though i am quite late in start reading this one. You wont truly feel monotony at whenever you want of your time (that's what catalogues are for relating to when you question me).

The most effective publication i at any time read. We have study and i am sure that i will likely to read yet again once again in the foreseeable future. You will not truly feel monotony at anytime of your time (that's what catalogs are for about in the event you request me).
