Excerpt: .which he is able thus to carry in mind the thought of distant or remote events, persons, and places, we call imagination.1 Through imagination present institutions can be explained by reference to their history. The school, for example, has certain peculiar characteristics. The division of the school period into eight years for the elementary school, four years for the high school, and four years for the college, has a definite historical background. The methods of study which are pursued, the subjects which are included in the curriculum, and a variety of other matters, are to be explained by reference to more or less remote past events. Imagination connects our immediate life with events taking place in distant parts of the earth. For the explanation of many of the events which we observe to be going on about us, we must be able to create...
